

I have been an XM Radio subscriber for about one year now, and I believe that XM Radio should be able to offer any information that is useful to its listeners just as commercial radio is able to do. Any attempt by the NAB to limit services on XM Radio is rather transparent, I think. Obviously, a subscription radio service that people are willing to pay for to get superior sound, no fade-out as we drive across the state or the country and limited to no commercials is certainly a serious threat to commercial radio, but the world is about competition, not attempts to block out your competition. If they feel threatened, let them offer competition.
